Part2 部分

新题部分

1 对结果开心的重要决定

Describe a time you made an important decision and were happy with the result

You should say:

- What the decision was

- Why you made the decision

- How easy it was for you to make the decision

And explain why you were happy with the result

Answer:

The important decision I want to talk about is that I made up my mind to devote six months to preparing for my language test instead of rushing to apply for overseas programs. Back then, most of my peers were eager to send out their applications as early as possible. However, my language scores were far from satisfactory, and I realised submitting applications with weak results would largely reduce my chances of getting offers. Actually, this was quite a tough call for me. I felt anxious about falling behind my classmates, and I constantly worried whether six-month preparation would end up being a waste of time. I talked things over with my parents and senior students, analysed my strengths and weaknesses, and finally stuck to this plan. During those six months, I kept a strict daily study routine and made steady progress step by step. Eventually I achieved my target score. I am genuinely satisfied with this decision, because not only did I obtain qualified language results, but I also built up greater self-discipline and confidence, which benefit my further studies enormously.

我想聊的这个重要决定，就是我下定决心花六个月专心备考语言考试，而不是仓促递交海外项目申请。那时候，我的大多数同龄人都急于尽早提交申请。但我的语言成绩远远达不到理想标准，我意识到拿着不理想的分数递交申请，会大幅降低拿到录取的概率。实际上做这个决定对我来说相当煎熬。我害怕落后于同班同学，也一直担心六个月的备考到头来会不会白白浪费时间。我和父母、学长学姐反复沟通，分析自身优缺点，最终坚持了这个计划。在那六个月里，我严格执行每日学习计划，一点点稳步提升。最后我考到了目标分数。我发自内心对这个决定感到满意，因为我不仅拿到合格的语言成绩，还培养出更强的自律与自信，这对我之后的学习大有裨益。

Q1. Which is better, to make a decision quickly or slowly?

Answer:

I believe whether to decide quickly or slowly hinges entirely on how significant the matter is. For trivial daily stuff like picking lunch or choosing entertainment, quick decisions help us save precious time. But for life-shifting choices related to education, career or finance, people should take adequate time to gather information, weigh risks and imagine potential consequences. Hasty judgements under pressure often lead to regrets. Of course, being overly hesitant is also problematic; we still need to set a reasonable time limit before reaching our final conclusion.

我认为快速还是缓慢做决定，完全取决于事情的重要程度。选午饭、找娱乐这类日常琐事，快速抉择可以帮我们节约宝贵时间。但对于教育、职业、财务这类会改变人生的选择，人们应当留出充足时间收集信息、权衡风险，预想可能的后果。压力之下仓促判断往往会留下遗憾。当然，过度犹豫同样不可取，我们还是要设定合理时限再得出最终结论。

Q2. Do you think most people's decisions are made in their 20s?

Answer:

A great many critical life decisions do tend to take place in people’s twenties. During this period, young adults select their career paths, consider romantic relationships and decide which city they intend to settle in. Even so, it would be inaccurate to claim most decisions only happen at this age. Quite a number of individuals rethink their life trajectories in their 30s or 40s, switching jobs or completely changing lifestyles. Age is just one variable; real-life experiences and opportunities also shape people’s major choices.

When group members hold conflicting opinions, open-minded discussion and reasonable compromise become really vital. Every participant ought to get an opportunity to explain their logic and concerns, so the whole group can fully understand diverse perspectives. It is wrong for one single person to force others to follow his or her own will. After listening to all viewpoints, the group can look for a balanced solution. If total agreement cannot be reached, voting is also a practical way to move forward, though everyone still needs to respect the final outcome.

People are surrounded by countless small decisions in their ordinary daily lives. For instance, they need to decide what to eat for meals, which transport to take, what clothes to wear and whether to scroll social media or read books in their spare time. Although these choices seem insignificant separately, they gradually add up and influence our daily rhythm and even personal habits. Most of these minor choices are made automatically without deep thinking, yet they still shape our day-to-day experiences.

choices, such as choosing to exercise or avoid mindless phone-scrolling, can build good habits little by little. However, it is not sensible to over-analyse every tiny detail. Q6. How can we tell the difference between an important and an easy decision?

Answer：

We can distinguish important decisions from trivial ones mainly by looking at their long-term influence. Important decisions will generate far-reaching consequences for our study, career or family life, and their effects may last for many years. By contrast, easy small-scale decisions

- What difficult thing this person did

- Why this person was successful

And explain how you feel about this person

Answer:

The person I would like to describe is my cousin, who managed to launch his own small online business despite numerous obstacles three years ago. Before starting the project, he worked as an ordinary office worker with limited income and no relevant entrepreneurial experience. His goal was to sell handmade cultural-creative products online, yet he faced many tough barriers. He had almost no initial capital, lacked marketing know-how, and received doubts from several family members who worried he would lose all his savings. Instead of giving up under pressure, he spent every evening after work learning e-commerce knowledge, studying customer preferences and refining his product designs. He tolerated slow sales in the early stage and constantly adjusted his strategies based on real-world feedback. Step by step, his store gained more customers and stable profits. I really admire him because his success did not come from luck. It came from consistent hard work, patience and the courage to keep trying when things went wrong. Q3. Other than making money, what is more important for a company?

Answer：

Apart from profit-making, several things carry great weight for a company. First of all, maintaining product quality and honest business values helps build long-term customer trust. Q4. Does money equal success?

Answer：

I definitely do not believe money is equal to success. Wealth is just one possible symbol of achievement. Success can take various different forms. For example, teachers gain success when they help students make progress, and doctors achieve a sense of fulfilment when they save patients' lives. Without personal satisfaction, good relationships or positive social influence, large amounts of money alone cannot represent real success.

Q5. How can companies help protect the environment?

Answer：

Companies can contribute to environmental protection in multiple practical ways. They can cut waste production, adopt clean energy and use recyclable materials during production procedures. Moreover, they can launch public-welfare campaigns to raise ordinary people’s environmental awareness. It is worth noting that environmental investment may raise short-term costs, but it brings long-term benefits for both society and the enterprise itself.

Teachers can often notice unhappy children to a certain degree, since they spend long hours observing students' behaviour in classrooms. Q4. Should teachers know what children are doing all the time?

Q5. What would make a student happy at school?

Answer：

Several factors contribute to students' happiness at school. First, positive relationships with classmates and supportive teachers play a vital role. Making progress in study and gaining a sense of achievement also brings joy. In addition, interesting after-school activities and a relaxed campus atmosphere are beneficial. and daily life in perfect order. He builds detailed to-do lists every Sunday night to arrange tasks for the coming week. He divides big assignments into several small achievable steps and marks deadlines clearly. Besides study, he also keeps his personal desk, wardrobe and digital files neatly sorted. I have witnessed this outstanding quality on many occasions. When our group needed to finish a demanding course project last semester, he sorted out all the materials, assigned reasonable tasks for every team member and tracked each milestone. Thanks to his arrangement, our group avoided confusion and handed in high-quality work ahead of schedule. For him, being organised is far more than a superficial neat habit. He tends to face heavy study pressure and numerous competing tasks. Good organisation helps him reduce unnecessary panic, avoid missing important deadlines and make full use of limited time. Without this trait, he would easily get overwhelmed by piles of academic work. That explains why he treats organisational skills as one of his most valuable personal strengths.

Q1. Do you think it is important for managers to be well organized?

Answer:

Q3. What can people do to become more organized?

Answer：

People can improve their organisational ability through several practical methods. First, they can write down to-do lists and mark clear deadlines instead of keeping all tasks inside their heads. Second, break large overwhelming projects into small manageable stages. Additionally, setting aside fixed short periods for regular sorting, whether for physical objects or digital documents, also works well. Consistency matters more than one-off huge efforts.

Q4. Are organized people more likely to be successful at work or in their studies?

Answer:

Generally speaking, organised individuals enjoy advantages in study and work, yet organisation alone cannot guarantee success. Good planning helps them manage pressure, complete tasks on time and reduce careless mistakes. However, real achievements also require creativity, professional knowledge, communication competence and good luck. Organisation serves as a helpful foundation rather than a magic ticket to guaranteed success.

Answer:

I believe it is beneficial for children to build organised habits from early childhood. When kids are young, their living and study tasks are relatively simple, so it is the perfect time to form good behavioural patterns. That being said, parents should not set overly strict standards. Too rigid requirements may create unnecessary mental burden for young children. Gentle guidance is much more suitable.

- When you went there

- What you did there

And explain why you feel it’ s a noisy place

Answer：

The noisy place I want to describe is a large-scale commercial food street located in the downtown area of my city. I visited this spot with several good friends on a Saturday evening about two months ago. We planned to hang out together, try various local snacks and spend some relaxing leisure time. After we arrived, we walked along the street, looked at different food stalls, tasted several popular street foods and chatted with each other. This place is extremely noisy for several obvious reasons. First of all, dozens of food vendors shout loudly to attract passing customers. Large crowds of visitors talk, laugh and call out to their companions everywhere. Meanwhile background music from small shops and loud vehicle noises from nearby main roads also mix into the environment. All these different kinds of sound overlap together. Even when my friends and I stood quite close to each other, we still needed to raise our voices so we could hear one another clearly. Although the noise level was fairly high, I still had a nice night there. The loud atmosphere reflected its liveliness and popularity.

Answer：

People can respect others in public by controlling their speaking volume. They ought to avoid shouting or having extremely heated loud conversations in quiet spaces such as libraries or subway carriages. Besides, it is better not to discuss highly private personal information in front of strangers. Being mindful of surrounding people does not require huge sacrifices, only basic self-awareness of one’s own behaviour.

Q3. Which area is exposed to noise more, the city or the countryside?

Answer：

Cities generally suffer far more noise pollution compared with rural countryside. Urban areas have heavy traffic, dense crowds, commercial activities and ongoing construction projects, all of which produce constant noise. Q4. What kinds of noises are there in our life?

Answer：

We meet various categories of noise in daily life. Traffic noise from cars, buses and motorbikes is extremely common. Then there is human-made noise such as loud talking, shouting and music. Q5. Should children not be allowed to make noise under any circumstances?

Answer:

It would be unreasonable to forbid children from making noise in every single situation. Kids naturally express excitement through shouting and laughing when they play. What matters is the appropriate occasion. In quiet public areas like libraries or hospitals, children should be guided to keep quiet. While in playgrounds or amusement parks, joyful noise from playing kids is totally acceptable.

Q6. Do you think it is good for children to make noise?

Answer:

Appropriate noise from playing children is generally a positive sign. It shows that youngsters are active, curious and enjoying themselves. Adults need to teach kids to distinguish suitable occasions for being noisy versus being quiet.

Describe a natural place in your city that you enjoy visiting

You should say:

- What it is like

- How often you go there

- Who you often go there with

And explain why you enjoy visiting there

Answer:

The natural place in my city that I really enjoy visiting is a large urban wetland park located in the northern suburban area. It is roughly a forty-minute bus ride away from the city centre. This park features wide lakes, stretches of reeds, various wild birds and well-paved walking trails. Green plants cover most of the land, and there are wooden viewing platforms where visitors can overlook the whole wetland. I try to visit this wetland park around twice a month, mostly on weekends when I am free from heavy study tasks. Normally I go there with my best friend, though occasionally I will go alone if I want some quiet time for myself. I love coming here for several reasons. Q1. Which is more important, protecting the environment or developing the economy?

Answer:

In my opinion, environmental protection and economic development should go hand-in-hand instead of competing against each other. If we only chase short-term economic growth at the cost of nature, polluted air and water will eventually damage people's health and create huge repair costs later on. At the same time, extremely strict environmental rules that completely block economic progress are also impractical. Governments need to seek balanced solutions, encouraging green industries so we can enjoy both prosperous economy and a healthy natural environment.

Absolutely, spending time in natural surroundings has noticeable effects on people’s emotional state. Scientific research has shown that green scenery, fresh air and sounds of wildlife can lower stress-related hormones in human bodies. When people feel exhausted or frustrated from city work and study, getting close to nature can ease negative feelings. Of course, nature cannot solve deep-seated psychological troubles, but it serves as a simple and effective way to lift people’s daily mood.

Q3. Do you think there should be many natural places in cities?

Without enough natural areas, city dwellers will be trapped among concrete buildings all year round. These natural spots do not have to be huge; even small community gardens can bring great benefits to people’s mental wellbeing.

Constant background chatter and outside distractions made it really hard for me to focus on listening to online courses. I cut down unnecessary spending on take-out food and fancy drinks, avoided impulse purchases of small decorative goods, and put aside a fixed sum of money from my monthly allowance every month. When I received the product, I felt a strong sense of achievement. It was not merely a piece of electronic gadget. It represented my self-control and patience. Up to now, I still use this pair of headphones almost every single day and I truly value this hard-earned purchase.

Answer:

The new skill I learned as a child was riding a regular two-wheel bicycle, when I was about nine years old. My father was the person who patiently taught me this practical life skill. Before that, I only rode small bikes with auxiliary training wheels. When those side wheels were removed, I constantly lost balance and fell down many times. At the beginning, I felt frightened and wanted to give up several times. My father did not push me hard. Instead, he ran beside me, held the back of the bike seat firmly, gave me clear safety tips and encouraged me not to fear small falls. We practised on the flat open ground in our community every weekend. Little by little, I began to keep my balance for short distances. One day unexpectedly, my father quietly let go without telling me, and I managed to ride forward all by myself. The moment I realised I could ride independently, I was filled with excitement and pride. This experience not only gave me a useful transportation skill, but also delivered an important lesson: progress often comes after repeated

Part3

Q1. Some people don't mind others walking into their shot when they're taking photos. Why?

Answer：

Different attitudes towards strangers entering photographs mainly come from people’ s expectations for their pictures. Some people only take casual documentary-style snapshots for memory. They do not pursue perfect, flawless frames, so passers-by appearing in the background do not trouble them. On the other hand, those preparing carefully-composed artistic shots will feel annoyed. They invest lots of time waiting for ideal conditions and hope to get clean, well-arranged final images.

对于陌生人入镜的不同态度，主要来自人们对照片的期待不一样。一部分人只是随手拍记录生活快照，并不追求画面完美无瑕疵，所以路人出现在背景中也无所谓。但另一部分精心构思艺术画面的人就会感到恼火，他们投入大量时间等待理想拍摄环境，希望拿到干净构图完整的成片。

Q2. Why do tourists like taking photos while they are travelling?

Answer：

Tourists take photos for several main reasons. First of all, photographs keep tangible memories of their journeys. Years later, pictures can bring back travel experiences that might otherwise fade from memory. Besides, many people share travel photos with family and friends, or post them on social media to show their experiences. Some tourists also treat photography as part of travelling itself, enjoying the process of capturing wonderful local scenery.

Q3. Do you think it’s ok to take photos everywhere?

Answer：

I do not believe people have the right to take photographs absolutely everywhere. In some private spaces such as museums with no-photography rules, religious sites or private residences, visitors should respect local regulations and other people’s privacy. Taking random photos of strangers without permission also counts as inappropriate behaviour. Public open-air areas are generally fine for shooting, but rules and other people’s feelings should always come first.

Answer:

The elderly person I admire a great deal is my maternal grandfather, who is now in his late seventies. I have known him since my earliest childhood, because we used to spend long holidays together at my grandparents' home. Even though he has retired for many years, he still keeps active mentally and physically. We enjoy doing several activities together whenever I pay him a visit. Sometimes we go for slow walks in the community park nearby. He tells me stories about his youth and the huge social changes he has witnessed across decades. Apart from chatting, we also like planting simple potted plants on his small balcony, watering them and watching them grow slowly. What I respect most about my grandfather is his gentle but firm personality. He went through a great many hardships in his younger days, yet he never becomes bitter or complains about fate. Instead, he maintains an optimistic attitude towards life and treats everyone around him sincerely. From him, I have learned to face difficulties calmly and cherish ordinary happy moments in life. I truly look up to him and value every chance we get to spend time with each other.

Q1. What do old people usually do in their daily life?

Answer:

Modern senior citizens take part in diverse daily activities. Many keep fit by doing square dancing, tai chi or slow walking in public parks. Some devote time to hobbies such as calligraphy, gardening or watching traditional opera. Quite a number of grandparents also help look after their grandchildren. Nevertheless, some elderly people live alone, and their social circle may become relatively limited after retirement.

Q2. Why is there a generation gap between the young and the old?

Answer：

The generation gap mainly results from different life experiences. Older generations grew up under totally different social and material conditions. Their values, consumption habits and views towards technology are shaped by their unique times. Young people grow up in a digital-era society. Without sufficient patient communication, both sides may find it hard to fully understand each other’s standpoints. That creates misunderstandings and the so-called generation gap.

Answer：

Compared with several decades ago, the overall quality of elderly people’ s life has seen obvious improvement. Many elderly folks struggle with digital devices, and loneliness among empty-nest elderly still remains a noticeable social issue.

Q1. How can we tell if a listener is listening carefully?

Answer:

We can judge whether a person listens attentively from both body language and verbal feedback. Careful listeners maintain suitable eye contact, nod appropriately and do not constantly check their mobile phones. They can also give relevant follow-up questions or brief comments based on what they just heard. If a person gives only empty "uh-huh" replies without responding to actual content, he or she is probably not truly paying attention.

The good shopping service I would like to talk about took place in a physical sports-goods shop in the city centre shopping mall. I visited this store on a Sunday afternoon three months ago, because I planned to buy a pair of running shoes for regular exercise. At first I just casually looked around without clear ideas about which model to pick. One sales assistant noticed my hesitation and came over, but he did not push me to buy expensive products immediately. Instead, he patiently asked about my real needs: how often I would go running, what type of ground I usually exercised on and my budget range. Based on my answers, he recommended two suitable shoe models and explained the pros and cons of each pair objectively. He allowed me to try several pairs on, walk around to feel the fit, and answered every one of my questions in detail. I finally chose one pair that fitted me perfectly. I was Small independent shops have unique merits. They often sell special, distinctive goods you cannot find in big-chain stores. Shop-owners can provide warm, personalised customer service. On the negative side, stock variety is limited, prices might be higher and opening hours are sometimes unstable. So shoppers weigh these factors before choosing where to spend money.

Answer:

Getting along well in a large extended family requires tolerance and mutual understanding. Different generations hold varied viewpoints on many issues, so people need to avoid forcing their own opinions onto others. It is unrealistic for every family member to agree all the time. Keeping appropriate personal boundaries and showing respect can reduce conflicts. Small acts of care also help maintain harmonious relationships within big families.

Describe an activity you do regularly that you think is a waste of time

You should say:

- What it is

- When you usually do it

- Why you do it

And explain why you think it is a waste of time

Answer:

The regular activity that I consider a waste of my time is mindlessly scrolling short-video applications on my mobile phone. This usually takes place in the gaps between my study tasks, such as after finishing homework or before I go to bed at night. Even though I tell myself I will only spend five minutes relaxing, I easily lose track of time. The algorithm keeps feeding me entertaining clips, so I keep clicking and watching one video after another. I know it does not bring me valuable knowledge or real rest. Many videos are superficial, repetitive and merely designed to grab my attention. Answer：

Multiple reasons lead people to break rules. Some individuals believe rules restrict their personal freedom, and they over-value their own short-term interests. Others think minor violations will never get discovered or punished. Moreover, if rules feel unfair or unreasonable in people’ s eyes, they will also choose not to follow them. Nevertheless, breaking rules usually brings hidden risks for both individuals and society.

spot located in the heart of our city. I visited it during the week-long national holiday last year, travelling together with two of my close friends. We planned to visit the ancient buildings, look at cultural exhibitions and take some souvenir photos. However, we had not expected such enormous crowds of tourists. Every corner of the site was packed with visitors. We needed to move very slowly in long queues to enter exhibition halls. It was difficult to appreciate the scenery properly because people constantly walked in front of us. We still managed to look at the main relic displays and took a few photos, yet most of our energy was spent squeezing through streams of people. Q2. Do you think people should learn ancient history before learning modern history?

The person who taught me a valuable new skill is my former university roommate, and the skill I learned was basic video editing. Back then, I needed to produce short video assignments for my media course, yet I barely knew anything about editing software. My roommate had accumulated solid practical experience from making personal short videos in his spare time. He generously offered to give me hands-on guidance. He patiently walked me through core operations step-by-step, such as cutting clips, adjusting background audio and adding simple text subtitles. He also pointed out my frequent small mistakes and gave practical improvement suggestions. Apart from face-to-face demonstration, he shared useful learning resources with me. At the beginning I made many errors and felt frustrated. But with his patient support, I gradually mastered the essential operations. Finally I finished my course video assignment successfully. I am really thankful to him. Without his help, I would have spent far more time struggling to figure everything out on my own. His willingness to share knowledge impressed me deeply.

at home about one year ago. I streamed this film on a video website during a weekend evening. This movie was supposed to be an adventure-themed production. Its plot was about a group of young protagonists going through mysterious dangerous events in a far-away land. On paper the story idea sounded attractive. However, the actual finished work was really disappointing. The storyline was predictable and full of plot holes. The characters had very shallow personalities, and their behaviours felt unreasonable. It relied heavily on fancy special effects to cover up its weak script. There was almost no deep thinking or emotional resonance. I kept waiting for exciting turning points, yet none appeared. After watching it, I felt I had wasted nearly two hours of my spare time. Q2. Are movies more likely to help people become more creative than books?

Answer:

It is hard to simply claim movies are more helpful for creativity than books. Movies offer finished visual images, which reduce the need for viewers to imagine. Both media can inspire creativity, but they work in completely different ways for the human mind.

- Why you go there

And explain why you do not like the trip

Answer:

The short trip I take regularly but dislike is the journey from my home to the downtown hospital, which I visit with my mother every month. We have to make this trip on fixed weekends to accompany my elderly grandmother for regular medical check-ups. It is not a long distance, roughly forty minutes by public transport, yet the whole process always drains my energy. We need to set off quite early in the morning to avoid huge hospital crowds. The bus route is often jammed during weekend rush hours, so we frequently get stuck in traffic. Inside the vehicle, it is usually stuffy and packed with passengers. Even though the destination serves an important purpose, the journey itself brings me little joy. I cannot enjoy sightseeing or relax along the way. Most of the time I just sit there feeling bored and impatient, staring out of the window waiting to arrive. There is no practical alternative transport for us, so I have to repeat this unpleasant short journey month after month.

我经常要进行却并不喜欢的短途出行，就是每个月我和妈妈去往市中心医院的路程。我们固定周末要陪年迈的外婆做定期体检。路程不算远，坐公交大概四十分钟，但整个过程总是耗尽我的精力。我们必须一大早就出发，避开医院庞大的人流。周末高峰时段公交线路经常拥堵，我们常常遇上堵车。公交车车厢里闷热拥挤。尽管此行目的十分重要，但这段旅途本身几乎无法带给我愉悦。沿途我没法欣赏风景，也不能好好放松。大多数时候我只能无聊又焦躁地坐着，望着窗外等待抵达目的地。我们没有其他更合适的出行选择，所以只能月复一月重复这段令人不快的短途行程。

Q1. Which is better for knowing more about a country? Travelling or reading books about it?

Answer:

Travelling and reading books each have their own strengths for understanding a country. Books offer systematic historical background and theoretical knowledge, free from the limits of time and money. However, reading cannot give you real-life sensory experience. When you travel, you meet local people, taste local food and witness

旅行和阅读书籍，在了解一个国家这件事上各有优势。书本可以提供系统的历史背景与理论知识，不受时间金钱条件制约。但读书无法给到真实的感官体验。旅行的时候，你可以接触当地人，品尝本土美食，亲眼看见真实社会状况。想要获得全面的认知，把两种方式结合才是最好的选择。

Q2. How much time do you think people should spend on a trip abroad?

Answer：

There is no universal standard for how long an overseas trip should last. Short trips of three to five days suit tourists who only want to visit famous landmarks. Two weeks or longer allows travellers to dive deeper into local culture and slow down their pace. People’ s available holiday time, budget and personal energy all shape the length of their journey. Quality matters more than pure duration.

境外旅行该持续多久并没有统一标准。三到五天短途，适合只想打卡知名景点的游客。两周甚至更久的行程，可以让旅行者深度感受本土文化，放慢节奏。人们可支配假期、预算、个人精力都会决定旅途时长。旅行质量远比单纯的时间长短更加重要。

Q3. Who prefers travelling abroad? The young or the old?

Answer：

Young people are generally more eager to travel overseas. They are more willing to accept unfamiliar cultures, and they have greater physical stamina for long-distance flights and tight travel schedules. That being said, many elderly groups also take foreign trips after retirement. They have more free time, yet they tend to choose more comfortable and relaxed tour arrangements.

Q4. Do Chinese people like travelling abroad?

Answer:

Large numbers of Chinese citizens enjoy overseas travelling, especially when travel restrictions are lifted. Many hope to experience different cultures, taste foreign food and take in unique natural scenery. Even so, overseas trips require considerable money and holiday leave. Therefore, not everyone can afford such experiences. Domestic tourism still remains the first option for most ordinary people.

Describe a popular person

You should say:

- Who this person is

- What kind of person he or she is

- When you see him/her normally

And explain why you think this person is popular

Answer:

The popular person I would like to talk about is a young university lecturer at my former college. I usually see him during lectures, school public sharing events, or on the university's online social media accounts. He possesses a warm and approachable personality, and he never acts arrogant despite receiving wide praise from students. His classes are never dull and textbook-driven. He mixes real-life social cases, interesting stories and interactive discussions into his teaching content. Outside of class, he is willing to communicate with students patiently. He gives thoughtful advice on academic confusion and even personal life puzzles. What truly makes him popular is that he genuinely respects every student. He does not only focus on top-performing

Many people hope to become popular for several psychological reasons. Popularity means being accepted and recognised by others, which satisfies people’s natural need for a sense of belonging. Popular individuals gain more opportunities in social activities and sometimes in work environments. Even so, chasing popularity blindly can be risky, because trying to please everyone may make people lose their true selves.

Q3. What are the qualities of being a good teacher?

Answer：

A good teacher needs more than solid professional knowledge. Patience, strong communication skills and genuine care for students are equally essential. Great teachers can explain complex knowledge in simple terms, inspire students' curiosity and respect individual differences among learners. Answer:

The successful sportsperson I greatly admire is a well-known Chinese table-tennis athlete. He has devoted most of his youth to professional table-tennis training and competitions. He has won numerous gold medals in world-class tournaments, including world championships and Olympic events. Beyond shining competition results, what impresses me most is his personal qualities. Off the pitch, he is described as down-to-earth and disciplined. He does not seek unnecessary media spotlight. Even after reaching the peak of his career, he still keeps strict daily training routines and stays modest about his achievements. He has suffered serious sports injuries and tough defeats during matches many times. However, he never gives in to setbacks. Instead, he analyses his weaknesses and keeps improving himself. For me, his achievements are praiseworthy, but his mental toughness is even more inspiring. His story teaches me that real success rarely comes by luck. It is built on long-term hard work and the courage to face failures bravely.

The building I really enjoy visiting is the city public library located in the downtown cultural district. I first learned about it from my high-school teacher, who recommended it to our class several years ago. This is a large modern-style building with clean simple outer appearances. Its outer walls are partly made of transparent glass panels. Inside, there are bright multi-storey reading areas, quiet study rooms and exhibition halls for cultural events. Large numbers of books and digital reading resources are stored on different floors. I tend to visit this library one or two times every month, mostly on weekends. I love coming here for multiple reasons. First of all, it provides massive free reading resources for ordinary citizens. More importantly, the whole building creates a peaceful focused atmosphere. When I step inside, I can escape noisy city distractions. Whether I read books, finish homework or just take time for quiet thinking, this space gives me a strong sense of calm and comfort.

Q1. Are there many tall buildings in your country?

Answer:

There is a huge number of tall buildings across China, especially in large-sized metropolises. Skyscrapers serve as office blocks, apartment housing and commercial shopping centres in city centres. Even some second-tier cities are constructing more high-rises as urbanisation moves forward. However, in small towns and rural areas, low-rise houses still dominate the landscape. Urban layout and architectural design vary from place to place due to multiple factors. Local climate and geographical conditions set basic limits for construction. Besides, local cultural traditions, population density and economic goals also play important roles. A bustling downtown business district prioritises commercial efficiency, while residential zones value quietness and living quality. Planners must adjust designs to fit real-life local circumstances instead of copying one single model everywhere.

Answer：

Living in high-rise buildings brings several obvious benefits. Residents can enjoy better panoramic views and sufficient natural daylight. Noise from streets on the ground floor is greatly reduced. In crowded cities, high-rises help save valuable land space by housing more people within one building. Many modern high-rises also equip residents with shared facilities such as elevators and security systems, improving daily convenience for dwellers.

Answer:

The interesting video I would like to describe is a short documentary clip I watched on a video-sharing platform at home on a rainy weekend evening several months ago. I came across this short piece by accident when I was scrolling for relaxing content after finishing heavy school assignments. The video recorded the daily work of a group of urban wildlife volunteers. It showed how these volunteers rescued injured stray animals, fed homeless cats and dogs in neighbourhoods, and educated local citizens about proper animal-protection knowledge. The footage was not produced with fancy special effects or dramatic plots. Instead, it presented real, ordinary moments from volunteer work. Many small warm details were captured by the camera, such as scared little animals gradually learning to trust human helpers. I was deeply touched by this simple but meaningful video. It reminded me that kindness can exist in small daily actions. It was not merely entertaining, but also made me reflect on how ordinary individuals can contribute to animal protection in our city.

Q2. Which is more helpful, watching videos or reading books?

Answer：

Neither videos nor books are absolutely superior; they serve different purposes. Videos deliver vivid visual and auditory information, making complicated knowledge easier to understand for beginners. However, books allow readers to control reading speed freely and spend longer thinking deeply over content. Videos suit intuitive learning, while printed books are better for in-depth analysis. Combining both resources creates the best learning outcome.

The boring place I want to talk about is a small local souvenir market located near a well-known tourist spot in my city. I visited this market two years ago during a public holiday, together with two of my classmates. We originally hoped to hunt for distinctive local handicrafts as small gifts for family members. However, our experience turned out to be really disappointing. Almost every shop sold identical mass-produced souvenirs. Most goods were cheap trinkets with little local cultural characteristic. We walked from one stall to another, yet we barely found anything interesting. The shop-keepers kept calling out to pass-by visitors trying to push sales, which created a noisy, stressful atmosphere. There were no creative exhibitions, no local folk-art performances and nothing special to explore. After wandering around for less than forty minutes, we decided to leave early. It felt like a complete waste of our holiday time. That is why I regard this tourist-oriented market as a pretty boring place.

Q2. Why aren't young people willing to listen to the experiences of older people?

Answer：

A major cause lies in their different life backgrounds. The advice from older generations is based on their own historical social environment, which may feel out-of-date for young people living in the digital era. Q3. What can people do when they feel bored?

Answer：

People have many practical ways to deal with boredom. Some choose to take up light hobbies such as reading, drawing or listening to music. Q4. Why are some teachers' classes boring? Are there any solutions?

Answer:

Some classes become dull mainly because teaching styles are too rigid. Teachers keep giving long monologues without interactive activities. Course content is limited to textbooks alone, without linking to real-world cases. Possible solutions include adding group discussions, vivid real-life examples and multimedia resources. Teachers also need to observe students' feedback and adjust their rhythm in time.

The early-rising experience I would like to talk about happened last spring. I got up extremely early at half past four in the morning to go mountain-climbing with my classmates. We planned to reach the mountain top to watch the sunrise over the horizon. In order to arrive before sunrise, we had to set off very long before dawn. When my alarm clock rang, it was still completely dark outside. I felt sleepy and reluctant to climb out of my warm bed. Still, I forced myself to get dressed quickly and met my classmates at the pre-arranged meeting spot. We took a taxi to the foot of the mountain and began hiking upwards step by step. The mountain air was fresh and cool, and we could see faint hints of light appearing in the distant sky. Eventually we successfully reached the peak just as the sun slowly rose above the hills. The magnificent golden sunrise scenery totally made up for my sleep loss. Answer:

The person who loves growing plants is my paternal grandmother. She has been keen on gardening for more than twenty years. At her small balcony and tiny backyard garden, she grows a rich variety of plants. Apart from beautiful flowering shrubs such as roses and jasmine, she also plants practical edible greens including green vegetables, chives and small tomatoes. She takes care of these plants with great patience every single day. She waters them at proper time periods, adds natural organic fertiliser, clears away weeds and carefully watches out for plant diseases or insect pests. She reads simple gardening articles to learn better planting skills. For her, growing plants is far more than a pastime. When seeds gradually sprout, bloom or bear fruit, she gains a strong sense of achievement. Watching living things thrive brings her inner peace and joy. In addition, home-grown vegetables are fresh and safe for family meals. This combination of pleasure and practical value explains her deep passion for gardening.

If I could introduce a new national law, I would make a law requiring all public-service venues to install accessible facilities for disabled citizens. At present, quite a lot of public buildings such as small shopping malls, community cultural centres and bus stops still lack complete barrier-free equipment. This new law would force these public locations to build ramps, accessible restrooms and clear guidance signs for people with physical disabilities. Once the law comes into force, disabled residents can take part in social activities independently without relying on others' constant help. I believe this law will gain wide support from the public, although some small-scale business owners may worry about reconstruction costs. This idea occurred to me when I once saw a disabled person struggling to enter a public building with no slope access. I feel this law is highly necessary. A civilised society ought to offer equal public-service opportunities for every group of citizens, including people living with disabilities.

Answer:

Good behaviour covers both public and private-domain performance. In public spaces, being polite, queue-jumping-free and respecting other people’s rights count as good conduct. In personal life, honesty, keeping promises and taking responsibility for your own actions are also essential. Good behaviour is reflected in countless small daily moves, not merely grand gestures.

Q5. What are the benefits for people to obey rules?

Answer：

Observing rules brings collective and individual benefits. For society, rules prevent chaos and protect public interests. For individuals, following regulations keeps people away from punishment and creates predictable safe surroundings. If large numbers of people ignore rules, everyone’ s quality of life will decline. So rule-abiding behaviour protects the interests of every member of society.

Q6. How can parents teach children to obey rules?

Answer：

Parents can teach rule-following behaviour through two main approaches. First of all, adults need to set good personal examples in daily life. Secondly, parents should explain why rules exist instead of simply ordering kids to obey. Gentle guidance and reasonable rewards or minor punishments help children gradually build awareness of rules from an early age.

Describe a friend from your childhood

You should say:

- Who he/she is

- Where and how you met each other

- What you often did together

And explain what made you like him/her

Answer：

The childhood friend I would like to describe is my best friend from primary school. We first met when we were seven years old, assigned to the same class in Grade One. Our desks were placed next to each other, so we quickly got to know one another. Back in those days, we spent nearly all our spare time together. After school, we would walk home side by side. playground, shared snacks and finished homework together at each other’ s homes. We talked about cartoon shows, our favourite toys and simple little dreams for the future. What drew me to him was his sincere and straightforward personality. He was always ready to offer help whenever I ran into small troubles. Even if we had minor disagreements occasionally, we would sort things out quickly without holding a grudge. Although we do not live in the same city any longer and cannot meet very frequently nowadays, our precious friendship from childhood still remains very important to me.

Q1. Do you still keep in touch with your friends from childhood? Why or why not?

Answer:

Some people maintain close contact with childhood friends, while others drift apart. When people move to different cities for further education or jobs, living distance creates barriers for face-to-face meetings. Life experiences gradually become different, so shared topics may reduce. Nevertheless, modern social-media tools make long-distance contact much easier than in the past.

Answer:

The person I know who hopes to work in the medical field is one of my high-school classmates. I got to know him when we entered senior high school and were assigned to the same class. He first formed the idea of becoming a doctor when he was around fourteen years old. At that time, one of his close family members suffered from a serious illness and received careful treatment from hospital medical staff. Witnessing how doctors relieved the patient' s pain left a deep impression on his young mind. He dreams of becoming a clinical doctor specialising in internal medicine in the future. To realise this goal, he has been working extremely hard on science-related subjects, especially biology and chemistry. He understands that medical training will involve long years of demanding study and heavy pressure. Even so, he remains highly motivated. rates, while others encouraged me to follow my personal interest. I spent quite a long time thinking this over. I read major-introduction materials, talked with senior university students and evaluated my own strengths and weaknesses. Finally I chose media-related studies. The outcome has turned out positive. I enjoy my coursework and keep gaining professional knowledge. This decision mattered a great deal because it shaped my university study experience and laid the foundation for my future career path. If I had selected a major only for practical benefits without personal interest, my college life would probably have become much less satisfying.

Q1. Do you think children sometimes have to make important decisions?

Answer:

Young children rarely need to make truly life-changing important decisions. They lack adequate life experience to judge long-term consequences. Even so, teenagers gradually need to take charge of small but meaningful choices, such as picking extra-curricular subjects. Adults should offer guidance instead of making every single choice for them.

The special-occasion food I want to talk about is mooncake, which is traditionally eaten during the Chinese Mid-Autumn Festival. This traditional festival falls on the 15th day of the eighth lunar month. Families gather together, admire the bright full moon and share mooncakes. Mooncakes are round baked pastries with thick sweet fillings inside. The production process is relatively complex. Pastry-makers first mix flour, oil and syrup to make the outer crust. Then they prepare fillings such as lotus-seed paste or red-bean paste. Workers wrap fillings inside the crust and press them into beautiful round moulds before baking them in ovens. Describe a quiet place you like to spend your free time in

You should say:

- Where it is

- How often you go there

- What you do there

And explain why you like this quiet place

Answer:

The quiet place I enjoy spending my spare time in is the reading corner on the top floor of our city public library. It is located in the downtown cultural zone, not far from the main business streets. I visit this spot about two or three times every month, mostly on weekend afternoons when I want to escape noisy city life. When I get there, I usually pick out one or two interesting books, sit by the large-size window and read for several hours. Sometimes I bring my notebook and do light-weight study tasks. Very few visitors come up to this particular floor, so conversations are extremely rare. People move softly and keep their voices down. I really appreciate this peaceful environment. Away from mobile-phone notifications and street noise, I can calm my racing

Many people favour quiet surroundings for mental reasons. Peaceful environments reduce outside distractions, helping people concentrate on reading, thinking or creative work. Besides, noise creates mental tiredness. Quiet spaces offer opportunities to release accumulated pressure. Of course, personality makes a difference. Introverted individuals generally gain more comfort from silence than outgoing people.

Q2. What places in cities are usually noisy?

Answer：

Cities contain multiple sources of loud noise. Busy main roads, large shopping malls, night markets and crowded tourist spots are typically very noisy. Public transport hubs such as train stations also produce constant loud sounds. Large-scale construction sites add further noise pollution. Residential communities can also become noisy during peak hours or when people hold group gatherings.

Q3. Is it hard to find quiet places in big cities?

Answer：

It can be challenging to seek out quiet spots in large metropolises. Population density and heavy human activity generate constant noise everywhere. Nevertheless, quiet locations still exist, such as library reading rooms, small-scale community parks and some museum exhibition halls. People just need to make an effort to look for them. They may not be right around every street corner, but they are still accessible.

Q4. Would you like to live in a very quiet place in the future?

Answer：

I would appreciate living in a relatively quiet area, but total absolute silence is not what I desire. If an environment is completely isolated and too silent, it may feel lonely and disconnected from society. A balanced location with low noise yet convenient access to public facilities suits me best. I want peace, but I also do not wish to be cut off from city life entirely.

Answer：

Long-term exposure to city noise brings many drawbacks. Constant noise disturbs sleep quality and makes it harder for people to focus on work or study. Psychologically, loud surroundings may increase feelings of anxiety and mental exhaustion. In the long run, persistent noise can even cause gradual damage to people’s hearing ability.

- Who gave it to you

- On what occasion you received it

And explain why you think it was special

Answer：

The special gift I would like to talk about is a hand-bound notebook given to me by my best friend on my eighteenth birthday. The notebook itself had simple but elegant cover design. Inside, my friend had filled many pages with hand-written messages. She recalled our happy memories from high-school days, wrote encouraging words for my future and added several small hand-drawn sketches. Unlike mass-produced commercial presents you can easily buy in shops, every page contained her genuine time and effort. Many other birthday gifts I got were practical consumer goods. This one carried unique emotional value. Whenever I open it, I can feel her sincere care and support. It reminds me of our precious friendship. Even now I keep it carefully stored on my bookshelf. For me, the true value of this gift lies not in its price, but in the heartfelt feelings behind it, which makes it so special among all my presents.

Q3. Is money a good gift?

The foreign language besides English that I really hope to learn is Japanese. I plan to combine multiple learning resources to study it step by step. I will take online beginner-level courses to master basic grammar and pronunciation. In my spare time, I intend to watch short videos and TV shows with bilingual subtitles to get used to real-life daily conversations. I also plan to memorise useful vocabulary on a daily basis. I have several main reasons for picking this language. I am deeply interested in its unique pop culture, including animation and documentaries. Knowing the language will let me enjoy original content without relying on translations. Besides, it could create potential opportunities for future travel or cross-cultural communication. I imagine that after I gain basic proficiency, I will feel a strong sense of achievement. I will be able to directly understand different cultural ideas and broaden my global horizons. Mastering another foreign language will open a brand-new window for me to observe the world.

Answer：

Translation applications become increasingly powerful, yet they cannot fully replace people who master foreign languages. Machine translation often makes mistakes with subtle meanings, cultural background and emotional tones. Human speakers can judge context and communicate flexibly. At first, I was frustrated and even a little upset, because all my hard work seemed to go to waste. However, I calmed myself down after a short while. I realised there was nothing I could do to change this official decision. Instead of sinking into negative emotions, I tried to transfer what I had learned to my ordinary coursework. Although I failed to take part in that competition, the knowledge and public-speaking practice I gained still brought me benefits in my later study life.

Q1. How do modern-day people get news?

Answer:

Nowadays most people acquire news mainly from digital sources. Short-video platforms, news apps and social-media feeds push real-time information to users every day. Traditional channels such as newspapers, radio and TV still exist, yet they are less popular among young generations. Online information is fast-updated, but audiences also need to watch out for false news spreading across the internet.

Q2. Do you think children should know about bad news?

Answer：

Children should be exposed to negative news in an age-appropriate way. Completely shielding kids from all bad information is unrealistic in modern society. Nevertheless, shocking violent news should be kept away from very young children. Parents can select simplified news content and offer proper guidance. This helps children gradually build a complete understanding of the real world.

Answer：

People share bad news for several psychological reasons. When individuals suffer misfortune, talking about troubles helps them release inner pressure and seek emotional comfort. Some hope to get practical advice and support from listeners. In a few cases, people spread negative stories out of curiosity or gossip. Q5. How can people comfort others who receive bad news?

Answer：

When comforting someone who has received bad news, the most important thing is to be a patient listener. People do not always need lots of useless persuasive words. Q6. Do you think bad news spreads faster than good news online?

Answer：

Unfortunately, negative information often spreads more rapidly on the internet. Bad news is more likely to arouse strong emotional reactions among audiences. The handicraft skill I am eager to learn is hand-made pottery. I hope to master shaping clay into beautiful ceramic works by hand. If I had the chance, I would sign up for offline pottery workshops taught by professional craftsmen. I plan to start from basic operations such as kneading clay and simple shaping techniques. I will watch demonstrations carefully and practise repeatedly. I also intend to learn knowledge about glazing and low-temperature firing. I really want to learn pottery for two major reasons. First, the whole creation process is very relaxing and helps me release study-related pressure. Besides, handmade ceramic items carry unique warmth that mass-produced goods lack. Once I master this skill, I plan to make practical daily-use objects. I would create simple teacups and small bowls for my family and close friends as special hand-made gifts. Answer：

The important festival that always makes me feel happy is the Spring Festival, Chinese Lunar New Year. Last Spring Festival, I spent the whole holiday together with my whole big family, including my grandparents, parents and other relatives. Before the festival arrived, we cleaned our home thoroughly and prepared piles of tasty festival food. On New Year’s Eve, all family members gathered for a big reunion dinner. We enjoyed abundant home-cooked dishes, watched the new-year TV gala and chatted about our past year’s experiences. Young family members also received red envelopes as good-luck blessings. During the following days, we visited relatives, exchanged greetings and shared snacks. I felt genuinely happy for several reasons. First of all, this festival gives us a precious chance for the whole extended family to get together. Everyone can slow down from busy work and study. Besides, the warm festive atmosphere and sincere good wishes from family members create strong feelings of belonging. Those precious reunion moments are what make the Spring Festival so joyful for me.

Of course, for highly risky matters, parents have the duty to stop children from making dangerous mistakes. As kids grow older, the right to choose should be gradually handed over to young people themselves.

Q3. What decisions in life are the most difficult for people?

Answer：

The most difficult decisions are usually those with long-term life influences. Choices about major education paths, career directions, marriage and place of residence carry heavy consequences. These decisions often lack a totally perfect answer. People must weigh different advantages and disadvantages, and accept that every option also comes with certain drawbacks.

最难做的，往往是会对人生产生长远影响的抉择。重大教育道路、职业方向、婚姻、定居地点这类选择后果沉重。这类决定通常不存在绝对完美答案。人们必须权衡多方利弊，接受每一个选项都会附带一些缺憾。

Q4. Is it good for leaders to make all decisions for team-members?

Answer：

It is not wise for a leader to make every single decision for all team-members. If subordinates never get chances to express opinions or make small-scale judgements, they cannot grow their own competence. A good leader sets general directions and listens to group feedback, while giving proper room for team-members to make local decisions by themselves.

Q5. What skills do people need to make good decisions?

Answer：

Making good decisions requires several key abilities. People ought to collect sufficient relevant information and analyse pros and cons objectively. They also need the capacity to foresee possible future outcomes. Besides, reasonable self-awareness helps individuals understand their own real needs. Emotion-control is also important so feelings do not cloud their judgement.

Answer：

Seeking advice from trusted people before big decisions is highly recommended. Other people can offer viewpoints we may ignore ourselves. Nevertheless, suggestions are only reference materials. After absorbing different opinions, the final choice should still depend on the person who will bear the consequences of that decision.

- Who this person is

- What kind of help he or she gave you

- When this happened

And explain how you felt about the help

Answer:

The family member who has given me lots of help is my father. The most impressive experience took place two years ago when I faced huge pressure in my study. At that time, my academic performance slipped and I felt greatly frustrated. I often felt anxious and doubted whether I could make further progress. My father noticed my bad mental state. Instead of blaming me for my unsatisfactory grades, he spent plenty of spare time talking with me patiently. He helped me analyse my weak points and encouraged me not to give up. He also gave me practical suggestions about time-management and learning methods. He told me not to place overly high expectations on myself all the time. With his emotional support and useful guidance, I slowly rebuilt my confidence. Step by step, I adjusted my study plans and improved my performance. I am deeply grateful for his help. It was not only practical advice, but also the mental comfort that pulled me through that tough period.

Q1. Are family members more helpful than friends?

Answer：

Family and friends offer different kinds of support. Family members usually provide long-term unconditional support, especially when people meet serious difficulties. However, close friends can better understand your peer-group experiences. Neither side is absolutely

Q2. What help do young people need from their families?

Answer：

Young people need multiple forms of family support. Apart from material resources for study and daily life, they require emotional comfort when they face setbacks. Family members can share life experience and give reasonable suggestions. Youngsters also need respect for their personal choices. Both practical aid and emotional care are equally valuable for them.

年轻人需要来自家庭多维度的支持。除学习生活的物质条件之外，遭遇挫折时需要情感慰藉。家人可以分享人生阅历，给到合理建议。年轻人也希望自己的选择得到尊重。现实帮助和情感关怀，对他们同等重要。

Q3. Should children help their family members?

Answer:

It is very meaningful for children to offer help to their family. Doing simple house-work or giving emotional support teaches kids responsibility and gratitude. They do not need to take on heavy adult-level burdens. Small contributions within their ability are enough. These small acts help them realise they are part of the whole family unit.

Answer:

Elderly family members need both practical life assistance and emotional company. Some seniors require help with housework, medical-care arrangements or digital-device operations. Even more importantly, they hope for regular communication and companionship from their children and grandchildren. Material support alone cannot satisfy old people’ s inner-emotional needs.

Q6. Do you think family support is more important than support from friends?

Answer：

Family support and friends' support serve different purposes and cannot be simply ranked. Family ties usually last for the whole lifetime. Meanwhile friends understand your current life situation very well. When people go through hard times, both sources of support are extremely precious.
